I'm Going Out of Business

This means a peremptory sacrificing of my admittedly High-grade stock of Clothing, Haberdashery and Hats.

I'm going to start the biggest sale Washington has ever known—beginning next Wednesday morning—and "make it short and sweet" by cutting the life out of the prices of everything in the house.

There won't be anything reserved. It's to be a clean sweep—open to your choice.

I'm telling you now—because you can wisely afford to wait a day or two for what's coming.

Store will be closed Monday and Tuesday to take inventory and mark the reductions.

All the particulars in Tuesday's papers.

Wait!

LIQUOR TAX CASE WILL TEST VALIDITY OF OLD STATUTES

Question Arises As to Legality of Collecting Revenue After New Law Prohibits Shipping and Concealing of Spirits.

If a decision against the government in a case now before the United States Court of Appeals is upheld by that body certain sections of the United States Revised Statutes in force long before enactment of the national prohibition law will be considered invalid, is the opinion of a prominent attorney.

The case is that of the "United States vs. Windham," and pertains to the violation of provisions for the enforcement of internal revenue taxes upon intoxicating liquors, and prosecution of persons charged with transporting and concealing distilled spirits contrary to provisions of Revised Statutes of the United States, under acts committed after the eighteenth amendment became effective.

A motion to quash the indictment against Jack Windham, who was tried at Florence, S. C. March 16, 1920, for violation of the sections, was granted by District Judge Smith.

Counsel for the defendant based their motion on the ground that the acts charged were committed after the 17th of January, 1920, when the eighteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, under the statute of October 28, 1919, enforcing the amendment, took effect.

Part of Statutory Plan. They showed that the sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States under which the defendant was indicted were part of a general statutory plan enacted many years ago for the purpose of protecting and collecting the revenue of the government.

Under that plan heavy taxes were imposed on the manufacture, vending and dealing in distilled and fermented liquors containing alcohol as an ingredient, and heavy penalties prescribed for the violation of the provisions for the collection of these taxes, as well as for the transportation or concealment of such liquors before the tax levied had been paid.

It was argued, therefore, that since the time when it was evident the policy of the country would appear to have encouraged the production of such taxable products, this policy had changed, and that in lieu of encouraging or permitting the production and vending such liquors, such production and use for beverage purposes had been wholly prohibited, which abrogated the entire system of deriving a revenue from taxes imposed on such production and use for beverage purposes.

Counsel pointed out that the general rule for the construction of statutes is that when a later statute is enacted inconsistent with a preceding statute and covering the entire ground of the subject-matter, it supersedes and implicitly repeals the preceding statute. Especially is this the case when the later statute imposes penalties of less severity for the same offense, the rule in such cases of clemency being that, where different penalties are imposed for the same offense, the lighter penalty, when imposed by a later statute, is presumed to supersede the earlier and heavier.

Law Would Be Conflicting. It was then claimed that under certain sections of the Revised Statutes a punishment is imposed for the failure to perform an act required by law, but that by the act of October 28, 1919, all these acts are prohibited, and to hold these sections still in force would be to hold that a man could be punished for failing to do that which he is prohibited from doing, and would not be allowed to do if he offered to.

Therefore the question arose whether the statute of October 28, 1919, expressly continues of force and refuses to repeal those sections of the Revised Statutes.

In construing section 35 of title 2 of the statute of October 28, 1919, counsel said it must be assumed that Congress had in mind the existing rules of law, as well as the statutory construction. Under the provisions of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting the placing of a party twice in jeopardy, and similar constitutional provisions, it has been held that the constitutional inhibition applies to any attempt to try a man twice and to punish him twice for the same offense. To such extent, therefore, as the last statute of October 28, 1919, would appear to cover and include the same offenses mentioned in the previous sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and to provide a punishment for them, it would be the imposing of different penalties and different punishments for the same offense, against the constitutional inhibition.

Question of Revised Statutes. The question further arose whether the section of the Revised Statutes of the United States and the prohibitions contained in the last statute of October 28, 1919, cover the same offenses, inasmuch as the prohibition of the sections of the Revised Statutes is against doing the things required with an intent to defraud the United States, or with intent to evade the tax, or when the tax has not been paid, while the provisions of the last statute are to prohibit their being done at all.

On behalf of the government it was claimed that these sections of the Revised Statutes can all still have an effect.

D. C. SUES TERMINAL COMPANY FOR LIGHTING Court Asked to Award City $10,000.74 for Illuminating Viaducts. The District of Columbia has filed suit against the Washington Terminal Company in the District Supreme Court for $10,000.74, the cost of maintaining 150 sixty-candle-power electric lights in the H. K. L. and M streets and Florida avenue viaducts, and two gas mantle street lights near the Union station, from August, 1917, to June, 1920. Suit is brought under a contract between the District and the terminal company, made in 1908, under which the company is to pay for lights in viaducts adjoining its premises.

The municipal authorities sought to hold the terminal company some years ago for the additional cost of lighting the streets alongside the station and the company's right of way, but the Court of Appeals declined to sustain their contention, holding the company liable only for lighting the viaducts.

MULES' RUNAWAY FATAL. Roy Jones of Stafford County, Va., Thrown Under Wheels. Correspondence of the Star. FREDERICKSBURG, Va., July 31.—Roy Jones of Stafford county was at the Mary Washington Hospital from injuries received when a wagon heavily loaded with lumber ran over him.

Mr. Jones was sixty-four years of age, a widower, and is survived by one brother and one sister. The accident occurred when Mr. Jones was driving a pair of mules hitched to a wagon loaded with 3,000 feet of lumber, near his home. The animals, becoming frightened, ran away and threw the driver under the wagon.

DORSEY EYES SENATE.

Governor of Georgia Will Contest for Hoke Smith's Toga.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 31.—Gov. Hugh M. Dorsey late today announced his candidacy for the United States Senate. Senator Hoke Smith already has announced for re-election and Thomas E. Watson, publisher and author, also is seeking the nomination. The three candidates will oppose each other in the democratic primary election September 28.

RADIOS CO-OPERATE.

Bureau of Standards Has Auxiliary Laboratories, Says Circular.

In a recent circular issued by the bureau of standards it is noted that in addition to its own radio laboratory the bureau has maintained two other laboratories for radio research: one conducted by the Signal Corps of the Army and the other by the Navy, the three working in close co-operation.

The radio work of the bureau is divided into two sections—radio research and testing and radio development. The first includes the investigation of the properties and phenomena of radio waves and antennas; the second includes the construction of telegraphy and associated problems, such as multiplex telephony, insulating materials and testing radio instruments. A notable development of the work of the bureau in this field is its co-operation with the research laboratories now maintained at many universities.

ing materials and testing radio instruments. A notable development of the work of the bureau in this field is its co-operation with the research laboratories now maintained at many universities. The bureau has been able to offer suggestions for research work, besides supplying advice on particular problems, furnishing data and publications and standardizing apparatus for the laboratories.

The French scientific mission which visited this country during the war made its headquarters at the bureau of standards and deposited a large amount of French radio material there.
